Reflection on
The Coodanup Experience

As we approach the finalization of our movie project, I look back on what we have done. The main group consisted of Michael, Ross and I, and we worked side by side to create our masterwork, with help from many other people along the way, it was a collaborative effort. It’s become a big part of our lives over the time we have been working on it, and it brings an interesting feeling of excitement to know that we are almost finished creating our beautiful piece of film.

We worked very hard to make this. Michael and I did the filming, together we edited the movie, and I helped with the graphic design. Even though at times the work was hard and sometimes it was stressful, making the movie is some of the most fun I have had in my life. I look back fondly on us running around with the camera, audio equipment and microphone as we chased down teachers for interviews and spoke to many students as well. I think we worked well together and put a lot of effort into this project.

There were a few complications that arose, sometimes things would get in the way. There were many times when we missed a media period due to other school circumstances, and sometimes when members of the team were not present to help out. However overall, I think there wasn’t too many issues.

In conclusion, I think the Coodanup Experience is not only a joyous time to watch, but an incredible time, it has been working on it. I think that the masterpiece is brilliant, tasteful, impressive, well made, and thought provoking and is only deserving of the highest of marks by critics and Mister Savage alike.
